Episcopal Church To Present Movie of The Passion Play

When the Passion Play is given every ten years at Oberammergau, people travel thousands of miles and cross oceans to see this marvelous dramatic presentation of the life of Christ, knowing that it will be another ten years before the opportunity comes again. If it is not possible to go to Oberammergau, the next best thing is to see the presentation through the movies. This is what is offered to Addison people next Tuesday under the auspices of the Episcopal Church in the high school auditorium. There are to be two performances, a matinee and an evening performance.

Oberammergau is a village of 1500 inhabitants, about the size of Addison. 700 of its citizens take part in the play. The ten years between these presentations are spent in training and no one can aspire to take one of the higher parts unless his own character is similar. The whole play is given in a spirit of reverence, and only nominal salaries given to players. They are not permitted to commercialize the play. This special film was taken about thirty miles from Oberammergau but with the original players of the Oberammergau cast.

Dr. J. M. Crane is Suddenly Summoned By Death Tuesday

Well known Addison physician stricken with heart attack on arising in Morning — End thought hastened by automobile accident six weeks ago — Funeral Friday.

Dr. John M. Crane, well known Addison physician, died unexpectedly at his home on Park Place at nine o'clock Tuesday morning, April 11.

Dr. Crane suffered several broken ribs, injury to his head, and severe shock in an automobile accident about six weeks ago, when his car overturned on the river road. Although he had resumed his practice Dr. Crane's family feel certain the effects of that accident were responsible for his death. Tuesday morning soon after arising, he went into the bathroom. Suffering a heart attack, he lost consciousness and passed away a few minutes later.

Dr. Crane was born in Addison, November 17, 1874, the son of the late George M. and Mary Orr Crane. Except for a period in college his entire life was spent in this village. Graduating from Addison High school in 1895, Dr. Crane took a course in New York University Medical college, from which he received his M. D. degree. Returning to Addison he opened local practice, which he continued with marked success. George M. Crane had learned from his father, who was also a doctor, a formula for treatment of cancer, and the two built up the widely known Addison Cancer Infirmary which drew patients from a wide area. While his father lived Dr. John Crane was the medical head of the institution which continued to flourish for many years. Later advancement in science and treatment of this disease by radium, gradually supplanted the dressings used here, but hundreds of people were completely cured of the malady at the Addison Infirmary, and enjoyed many years of subsequent health.

On April 12, 1905, Dr. Crane married Prudence McKay. To them was born one daughter, Elizabeth Crane, now Mrs. Eugene Tompkins of Elmira. Dr. Crane is the fourth member of the family to die inside of three years.

He was a member of Addison Mason Lodge, F. and A. M., No. 118.

Besides his wife and daughter, Dr. Crane leaves two brothers, Howard O., and Horace G. Crane both of Addison. One sister, Mrs. Frederick C. Farnham of Buffalo. Also two neices and one nephew; Miss Helen J. Crane of Addison, Miss Mary Charlotte Farnham of National Park Seminary, Forest Glen, Md., and George Farnham of Princeton University. Mr. and Mrs. Farnham were on their way north from Miami, Fla., when Dr. Crane died and up to Wednesday afternoon could not be communicated with.

The funeral will be held from the late home Friday afternoon at three o'clock. Burial will be in the Addison Rural Cemetery.

Teachers Not Free From State Income Taxes

Albany, N. Y., April 7,—Employees of New York state and of all the municipalities of the State, including school teachers, are subject to tax upon their salaries under the New York Personal Income Tax Law. Cortland A. Wilber, director of the State Income Tax Bureau, today stated that he was calling the attention of this group of taxpayers to this fact. He added that a number of state and municipal employees, including school teachers, have either been misinformed or have been led to an eroneous conclusion by reason of the fact that their salaries are not subject to tax under the Federal Law and that they were not preparing to file their State returns because of this.

Furthermore, Mr. Wilbur declared that such State and municipal employees and school teachers who are members of a pension on retirement fund, deductions for which are made from the salary checks each pay day, are required in making up their State income tax returns to include therein the entire amount of their stated salaries and pay any tax due thereon. These amounts so deducted from their pay are considered as constructively received and paid into the proper fund for the benefit of such recipients and therefore should be reported as part of their stated salary.

The State income tax must be paid on or before Saturday, April 15. Exemptions remain the same as last year.

Mrs. Edward Willetts and daughter Norma of Johnson City, called on their aunt, Mrs. Eva Groves, Sunday.

New Well Gets Flow of Gas in Rathbone Field

Newman, drilling for Dorr T. Martin and others on the old Hargrave farm, struck a good flow of gas at 420 feet last Saturday. This location is about one and one half miles southwest of Cameron Mills.

The first gas ws struck in this hole earlier in the week at a depth of approximately 300 feet. The hole was full of water at the time, and the force of the gas blew water and sand pumpings clear of the well. Casing was run excluding this first gas and the water from the hole, so the second flow of gas is dry. Drilling is continuing.

Smith and Bly, contracting drillers on the Phelps well at Addison, completed the hole to 2,000 feet Tuesday afternoon. No additional flow of gas was encountered after about 1,100 feet. The contractors reported to be dry.

The Phelps is the second well drilled by the Addison community group to test possibilities for shallow gas in this section.

The Sovocool No. 2 well and the Considine No. 1 were equipped with rods and tubing this week to enable the owners to keep water pumped from the gas sands.

Addison Man Tells About The Resurrection of Gambrinus

At one minute after midnight on Friday, April 7, old Gambrinus awoke from his state of partially suspended animation and stood triumphant and rampant to wave a golden, white-collared blessing (?) over a thirsty land parched by the drought (?) of thirteen years.

At Buffalo the Iroquois Beverage Corporation, engaged in the production of "near-beer" since the Volstead act became effective, had the only plant in readiness there to meet the enormous demand for three-point-two, and from Thursday night until the doors were closed on Saturday for a week-end respite the plant was besieged with hundreds of applications, submitted in person and by telephone, for immediate service. Order was maintained by two or three police offices; the producing facilities were crowded to their utmost capacity; bottles were filled pasteurized and labeled at a rate up to eighteen dozen a minute, and deliveries were made as rapidly as the cases reached the shipping room; yet the supply could not be kept up to the demand.

The duty of controlling the flow of beer into and out of big measuring tanks and adjusting the payment of tax at the rate of five dollars a barrel devolved upon the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol, and W. R. Perry of Addison was the only inspector at Buffalo available for this work last week, so Mr. Perry spent about fourteen hours a day running around the premises disguised as a county jailer with a mess of locks and keys. An initial deposit of $4,000 was made by the company to cover the first 800 barrels of beer, followed by the purchase of stamps amounting to $5,000, and still more stamps are required this week.

At Rochester, Syracuse, Elmira, Jamestown, Dunkirk and other points in the state and throughout the United States applications have been made for the new brewing permits, and inspectors are hardly able to cover all plants promptly and thoroughly. The office at Buffalo has only six men available for this duty in Western New York and they are being assigned to inspections as fast as they can visit the various plants in their territory. Prosperity? Oh, yeah!

EASTER

Next Sunday people throughout the greater part of the civilized world will pause to commemorate the greatest event in all history. More persons will attend church April 16, than any other day during the year 1933. For Sunday, April 16 is Easter and thousands of people who go to church no other day in the year, will enter its portals that morning.

Nineteen hundred years ago the greatest man who ever trod this earth, was crucified. He who was the most humble of humans, yet born a King, gave His life as a sacrifice in expiation of the world's sins. He died an ignoble, torturous death, nailed upon the cross between two thieves. But death to Him was not the end of life and the end of ministry started in the few, short years among primitive people—It was the real beginning of that ministry for the word that Jesus of Nazareth had risen from death, spread from Jerusalem to every nation in the world.

Because people generally believe in a "Risen Lord", they go to church on Easter of all days in the year. Man is a highly worshipful creature, and few who actually know the story of Christ's life actually disbelieve in Him. A famous preacher recently said: "Nearly all men acknowledge their creator directly or indirectly . . . . . Once a militant atheist said, 'Yes I am an atheist, and I thank God I am an atheist'."

The world as a whole would be far richer in the things that actually amount to the most in life, if we were all fifty-two weeks a year Christians, instead of once a year. But at least it is something for persons almost universally, to make this acknowledgement upon one day. For years it has been a set phrase to accuse church people generally of being hypocrites, yet it is one of those sayings so utterly untrue as to need no refutation. When a crime is committed, did anyone ever hear of the police looking for the wrong-doer first among the crowds coming from a church? No, it would be the last place they would look instead of the first. Wrong-doers will get into the church, as they get into the lodges and every other organization where men congregate, but they are the exception and not the rule.

Search our civilization over, and point out all the finer things of life—betterment in living conditions—more humane treatment of our neighbors—sacrifices of self for the advancement of others—then easily trace these impulses back to their real source. For the Man of Galilee was the personification of all that is noble and best in the human race.

That is why the world goes to church on Easter. We are a careless people, but deep down underneath is a spark kindled to life by this holy day.

A FASHION NOTE FROM THE BIBLE

We read a report in a New York paper of a convention of beauty shop people a few weeks ago. According to this report the most interesting things in the exhibit were removable lips, demountable eyelashes, devices to change the shape of the nose, apparatus to hold the ears back, artificial eye-sparkle and little pictures for fingernail decoration.

We began to wonder how women could be so foolish as to think that such artificialities make them attractive to men. But before we came to the point of rising an outcry against this degenerate modern age we happened to think that we had read something of the sort before.

We looked it up and found it, written more than two thousand years ago by a prophet named Isaiah.

"The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go and making a tinkling with their feet . . . In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments about their feet, and their cauls, and their round tires like the moon, the chains and the bracelets and the mufflers, the bonnets and the ornaments of the legs, and the headbands, and the tablets, and the earrings, the ring and nose jewels, the changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crisping pins, the glasses and the fine linen, and the hoods and the veils."

Perhaps it wouldn't be any use for us to try to talk the girls out of their finery. Apparently Isaiah's threats didn't change feminine nature, which seems to be about the same now as it was in Old Testament days. But we have an idea that the girls of Isaiah's time, like those of today, didn't put on their dew-dads so much to make themselves interesting to men as to make other women envious. That, however, is a mere man's point of view.

CONSOLIDATING FARM CREDIT

So far as the first step in the new Administration's program of assistance to agriculture goes, we do not see how anybody can quarrel with it. It consolidates the Federal Land Banks, the Federal Intermediate Credit Banks, the Farm Board, the Farm Loan Board, the Crop Production Loan Office, the Seed Loan Office, and the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporations into one agency under a single head.

Most people did not even know that there were so many Governmental sources from which farmers could borrow money. We must agree with Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., who is the new chairman of the Federal Farm Board and will manage this whole business of farm loans, that the old system was too complicated and expensive and that the average farmer in need of financial assistance has not known where to apply, and often had to deal with many agencies at widely scattered points, instead of having all of his troubles attended to in one office.

We understand that no new form of farm credit is provided for, merely the centralization of administration of all existing kinds of credit. These include long-term mortgage loans, short-term crop loans, loans for the purchase of seed and emergency relief loans, besides loans to co-operatives.

From all we can learn about Mr. Morgenthau, who has become the big boss of farm finance, he is a good man for the job. His early training in finance was under his father, who made a large fortune in business and was President Wilson's Ambassador to Turkey. The younger Morgenthau was in the real estate business in New York for a time, but went into farming on a large scale. He has a 1,400-acre dairy and stock farm in New York State, and for several years has been the publisher of one of the large farm journals, the American Agriculturist.

With the new set-up and the administration of farm credit in competent hands, it looks as if every real farmer who has a real need for a loan and can demonstrate that he is capable of paying it off in time ought to get the relief he desires.

Ex-President Hoover saw the need for combining many of these overlapping federal departments into fewer, more effective units, but a hostile Congress would consent to none of his ideas. So the country continued to suffer through long months after a little teamwork might have changed the situation.

One thing is certain, the Democratic party cannot complain at the cooperation which the new Administration has received from people of all party affiliations and their representatives. Everyone is so filled with desire that better times come, few care little who gets the credit for bringing them.

When Vice President Garner, then Speaker of the House, was advocating the hugest pork barrel measure in all history, that post office bill, few people would have dared predict his party would slash nearly half a billion off the veterans' appropriations one year later.

IS THERE A NEW CHICAGO

Among those who are well-informed on municipal governments, the latest sensation is the success which has attended civic reform in Chicago, along a wide front. Police Commissioner Allman of Chicago is proving something of a revelation and example to the big American cities. Here is the verdict of the American Magazine, after a study of his work. ""A few days of research convinced us that Chicago's new point of view is the eagerness of the mob to string with a winner. When criminals were in control, the most dramatic events were the exploits of killers. Now Chicago is interested mostly in the way the police are smashing the hoodlums. Allman has earned his title of Iron Man because he shows no favor, either to crooks, politicians, policemen or personal friends. He is a hard taskmaster but a just one. If the present Chicago plan continues its efficient operation, it would seem that the crime problem is no problem at all." We wonder.

THE AKRON DISASTER

The loss of the huge Naval dirigible "Akron" with seventy-three lives is the most serious disaster since men first began to navigate the air. Caught in the middle of a terrific thunderstorm off Barnegat Bay the great airship plunged into the sea and only four of its crew and passengers were rescued, one of them dying shortly afterwards.

Tragedies like this are a part of the price humanity pays for progress. Doubtless there will be a great outcry against further experiments in aerial navigation as a result of the "Akron's" crash. But there were outcries against railroads, against the automobile, against airplanes, when they were young. Millions have perished at sea, yet nobody proposes to abolish ships. If safety were the only rule of life mankind would still be living in the primitive jungle.

MANY CHANGES

There are many changes in the Government service, particularly in Washington, despite the fact that the Democratic headsmen claim they have been too busy up to date to pay very much attention to patronage matters. There seems to be prospects of a veritable political slaughter of Republican office-holders "just around the corner".

THE GREAT IDEA

WHEN Gideon called for volunteers to fight the Midianites, thirty-two thousand responded. Gideon looked them over critically. He knew the conflicting motives that had brought them there—some from mere love of adventure; some because they were afraid to be taunted with cowardice; some for plunder; some to get away from their wives. He determined to weed them out at once:

Bruce Barton

"Whosoever is fearful and afraid, let him go home to-night," he proclaimed.

The next morning twenty-two thousand had vanished. Only ten thousand remained.

Still Gideon was unsatisfied. He hit upon a stratagem. Down the hillside and across a little brook he led the whole band. It was a hot morning; the men were thirsty and tired; and Gideon, standing on the bank and watching, had a shrewd idea that character would show itself under the strain. Sure enough, of the ten thousand, a vast majority knelt down and pushed their faces into the cool, clear water, taking long refreshing draughts. But a few were too eager. They caught up the water in their hands, dashed it into their faces, and hurried across to the other bank, restless to be on!

Only a handful; only three hundred. But Gideon kept them and sent the rest home. Better three hundred who could not be held back from the battle than ten thousand who were merely half-heartedly ready to go.

With the three hundred he won.

That higher type of leadership which calls forth men's greatest energies by the promise of obstacles rather than the picture of rewards—that was the leadership of Jesus. By it he tempered the soft metal of his disciples' nature into keen hard steel. The final conference with which he prepared them for their work is thrilling in its majestic appeal to courage. Listen to the calm recital of the deprivations and dangers:

Get you no gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses.

No wallet for your journey; neither two coats, nor shoes nor staff.

Beware of men: for they will deliver you up to councils and in their synagogues they will scourge you; yea and before governors and kings shall ye be brought for my sake.

He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me. And he that doth not take his cross and follow after me is not worthy of me.

He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it.

Watch the faces and the figures. See the shoulders straighten, the muscles of the lips grow hard. There is power in those faces that will not be withstood.

The great Idea prevailed.

Sunday School Lesson

by Rev. Charles E. Dunn.

Jesus Transfigured.
Lesson for April 16th. Mark 9:2-29.
Golden Text: John 1:14.

The Transfiguration is a good lesson for Easter Sunday, for the glory of the Master's radiant face on the mountain top is akin to the glory of his risen body.

Rev. Chas. E. Dunn

It is one of the most impressive scenes in the career of Jesus, a spectacle of high religious significance. We are at once reminded of the Baptism, for the same heavenly voice, testifying to the divine Sonship of the Nazarene, speaks again. We also find here a vivid suggestion of two supreme forces that anticipated the advent of Jesus; for Moses, the representative of the law, and Elijah, a typical prophet, both appear in the wondrous vision.

But the matchless worth of this ethereal, mystical glorification is to be found in the light it throws upon the grandeur of the Person of Jesus. Just what happened we do not precisely know. Like the birth and resurrection narratives, the story of the transfiguration is saturated with the ecstasy of poetry. Therefore it cannot be analyzed or dissected as though it were a routine bit of fact. What we can be sure of is that Jesus was mysteriously exalted in the eyes of his disciples, with a divine illumination that strengthened mightily their appreciation of His deity. To a lesser degree this experience came to Moses, whose face shone after his communion with God at Sinai; to Stephen, whose countenance, at his trial, seemed that of an angel; and to Webster, who is said, after the delivery of his famous Bunker Hill oration, to have worn a grand expression that awed those near him.

Note that the disciples, at the close of his transforming experience, "saw no one any more, save Jesus only." May this be the experience of every follower of the Lord!

Then after the vision came the clear call to serve a needy world. From the mountain top of inspiration the disciples descended to the plain, there to meet an epileptic boy whom they vainly tried to cure. They had not sufficient spiritual vitality. There was a lack of personal trust in God. But when the Master came He at once remedied this deficiency, and restored the lad's shattered health.

IN LITTLE OLD NEW YORK

TYPEWRITER . . . . has birthday

I have a vivid memory of the day when my mother received a letter from her younger brother in Buffalo, with the words printed instead of written with a pen. He said, "This letter is written on a new kind of machine we have got in the office called a typewriter."

That was almost sixty years ago; about 1876, I should say. The typewriter was only three or four years old then, for the sixtieth anniversary of its invention by Christopher Sholes has just been celebrated.

There was quite a celebration organized by the Young Women's Christian Association. The typewriter, they held, had emancipated women by making it possible for them to do work in offices. I don't think that is sound reasoning. Hardly anybody but men used typewriters for at least twenty years after the machine was invented.

The rush of women into business began in the early 1890's, after the telephone people had broken down the barriers that kept women out of offices.

TODAY and TOMORROW

by FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

NATIONALISM . . . . a kick-back

A lot of the world's present troubles are due to an excess of Nationalistic pride. Every nation is trying to be self-contained, and then grouching because other nations won't trade with it!

Every dollar we spend for foreign goods helps some other nation to buy our goods. I believe in America first, but I do not believe in the stupid doctrine which would prohibit me from buying something I wanted because it was made abroad.

Nearly a hundred years ago there was an agitation in this country similar to the "Buy American" movement of today. The party which advocated non-intercourse with foreign countries got the nick-name of "Know-Nothings." Presently we will wake up again to the truth that every obstacle to international trade hurts everybody concerned.

JEWS . . . . . in Germany

Jewish people all over the world are greatly disturbed over the policy if the new "Nazi" government of Germany, under the practical dictatorship of Chancellor Hilter, in boycotting Jewish merchants, doctors, teachers and others.

I talked the other day with an intelligent young German Jew who had been getting letters from home about the situation in Germany. He was not at all worried. His people had written that they were not being annoyed and that the whole anti-Jewish agitation was directed at a Communist element, mainly composed of Jews.

Another German, a non-Jew, said to me, "Here in America the Jews work like other people. In Germany a lot of them don't do anything but try to make trouble for the Government."

But, of course, the German government has handled the situation stupidly, as it always handles any situation. More than a hundred years ago the great French historian, Guizot, wrote, "There is something in the German temperament which makes them utterly unable to understand the point of view of other peoples."

MACHINES . . . . . can't think

When these hard times are over—and that won't be long now—we shall not go backward but forward. And one thing we may look for is more and more perfection of machines to do our work for us.

When I was a boy I used to admire the muscular development of the men who worked in my uncle's machine shop. Not long ago I visited the same plant, now tremendously changed, and found one of those old timers still working.

He was sitting in a rocking-chair watching an automatic machine do almost exactly the same sort of work he used to do by hand, only many times as rapidly and accurately. Every once in a while he would take a finished piece off the machine and put a new block of metal in its place.

"They say the machines will throw everybody out of work," he said, "but I notice it still takes a human brain to tell the machine when to stop and start." That is something people overlook. Nobody has yet made a machine that can think, and nobody ever will.

TELEPHONE . . . . another step

Everybody who has a telephone must have wished for some sort of an attachment which would answer automatically when the subscriber is away.

Word comes from Vienna that just such a device has been invented and is in use there. When one is going to be out of telephone reach he sets the implement to the hour when he expects to be back. Then, if a call comes thru in his absence the caller hears a gong ring to indicate the hour when the person called will return. When he returns he finds a record of all calls.

It will be easy to develop that idea into a phonograph record which would say, "Mr. Smith has gone to Florida but will be back on the fifteenth," or whatever other message it is desired to convey.

Something of that sort will come some day.

Shipping and handling charges are still high; which makes it possible to sell at home for less and make more money in the long run. An advertisement in this paper helps find a buyer.

A boy's criticism of his home, his parents, his brothers and sisters is probably dictated by a feeling of responsibility for his family, by his loyalty to them and a desire to have them live up to the standards of his group.

Easter Bunnies Right On Time

Easter bunnies will be right on time this year, as always. These two maidens were slightly in doubt so they went out and around and about and did they find bunnies, well yes! So now Sara Belle and Evelyn Tiffany, maidens fair of footlight fame, want all good little boys and girls to know that they have the evidence and that Easter bunnies and all their friends will be right on the job on Easter morning.

President Keeping Congress Busy With Many Measures

Washington, April 10,—President Roosevelt, after more than a month in office, is still riding the top wave of popularity and authority. He is growing in the esteem of many who undervalued him before he took office, and certainly is proving himself the best politician who has occupied the White House in many years.

There is no politics, however, in the plan for refinancing farm mortgages which the President proposes and which Congress doubtless will adopt. Under this plan the Farm Loan Board will take over farm mortgages, extending the time for their payment and establishing the interest rate at 4½ per cent.

Under the blanket authority granted him by Congress to reduce the Governmental expenditures, Mr. Roosevelt's director of the budget, Lewis E .Douglas, has worked out a system which will cut an estimated nine hundred million a year off the Federal expenses. It will still cost some four thousand millions a year to operate the Federal machine, and just how this money is to be raised is not yet completely clear. There will have to be some new revenue legislation, but that is still in the future.

Besides cutting about $400,000,000 a year off veteran relief, Mr. Douglas's economy program calls for a reduction of fifteen percent in all federal salaries. This will affect pretty close to a million people on Uucle Sam's payroll, for it includes the Army and Navy as well as civil employees.

Protection for Investors

There is every reason to expect that the Administration's plan for Federal control of all new issues of stocks and bonds and perhaps also over the sales of old issues, will be adopted substantially as the President has requested it. This is calculated to do away with many of the frauds which were perpetrated upon a gullible public during the recent boom. It is also a part of the program for the protection of the investor for the Government to exercise a high degree of control over all evchanges in which securities and commodities are traded in.

The Senate Finance Committee's investigation of the banking situation has been extended to private banking institutions, and the great house of J. P. Morgan & Company is due to be called upon to tell how private investiment banking houses work.

The general banking policy of the Administration is beginning to take shape. It looks as if it would work out into a single banking system under which every bank would be required to be a member of the Federal Reserve system, and perhaps to have a Federal charter. It would be easy and legal to force State banks to become National banks by imposing prohibitive tax on their checks, for example, or by refusing to let them participate in any plan for the insurance or guaranteee of deposits.

For the Unemployed

The President's plan for putting an army of unemployed at work in the national forests has been approved by Congress, and there is little doubt that he will get, perhaps before this is printed, the authority he seeks to lend five hundred millions to the states for direct unemployment relief. Every possible effort to put men back to work is being made, and intensive study is being given to numerous "self-liquidating" projects of public work which might be financed by Government loans to be repaid out of earnings. For example the new bridge across the Golden Gate at San Francisco and the Grand Island bridge in the Niagara River between Buffalo and Niagara Falls are being financed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but will eventually earn enough to reenough to pay back the loans.

The same policy may be adopted for power projects and other enterprises which are sure to earn enough to pay back the loan.

Where the money is coming from to lend, enough if it to make this policy of stimulating business and putting men back to work big enough to make a dent in the unemployment situation, is another question. There is talk about a huge bond issue, perhaps running the national debt up from its present twenty-one thousand million dollars to thirty billions.

Take Your Home Town Paper
For Worthwhile News

Not In the Budget

Such an issue would not necessarily interfere with "balancing the budget," since the interest charges on such a bond issue would be comparatively small and one change which is empending in our Governmental system is in its book-keeping, in which moneys raised by loans will be kept separate from those raised by taxation. Current expenses and interest on loans are expected to be paid out of taxes; there is no suggestion now of paying off the principal of any of the existing loans or the projected new ones.

In this matter of public works, the expectation is that contractors and suppliers of materials will be required to adopt the thirty-hour week for labor, six hours a day, five days a week. And on its own initative the Senate has under consideration a bill which would compel all private industry engaged in inter-state commerce to adopt the thirty hour week, under penalty of having its products barred from trade across state lines.

That Roosevelt Humor

The personal life of the Roosevelts in the White House is the subject of innumerable anecdotes illustrating the simplicity and homelikeness of the Executive Mansions's new occupants. They keep practically open house for their friends and casual acquaintances, just as they did at their home in Hyde Park. And the verdict of Washington is that they are not exhibiting any of the signs of "swelled head" which have sometimes afflicted Presidential families.

One lady who was invited in an offhand way by Mrs. Roosevelt to come to dinner said at the table:

"I never expected to dine in the White House."

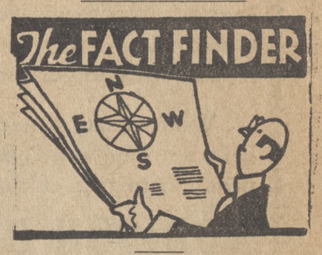
"You've got nothing on me," replied President Roosevelt.

HOW HOUGHTON COLLEGE OF HOUGHTON, N. Y., MEETS THE DEPRESSION

President Luckey believes that, unless vigorous steps are taken to make it possible for young men and women to continue their college education, the effects of this depression will be felt for years to come; for what can be more fatal to the future state than the failure to train Christian leaders?

To help meet this emergency, last summer Houghton College put on a building program, employing a competent foreman and hiring students to do the work. For the coming year, the college has agreed to permit every student, who desires to do so, to work for one-third of his board so long as his work is satisfactory. Also the college is making arrangements for students, who wish to board themselves, to do so .

President Luckey also states that, if there are enough persons who wish to invest in annuities, the college will continue a building program, hiring the students to do the work under a competent foreman. This will make it possible for people to secure an income for life and at the same time to help worthy young men to get a college education without making them objects of charity.



Origin of News

The word "news" is commonly supposed to be derived from the adjcctive, new. It is said, however, that its origin is traceable to a custom in former times of placing in the newspapers of the day the initial letters of the cardinal points of the compass. These letters are to indicate that the paper contained intelligence from the four quarters of the globe.

N. Y. Legislature Adjourned After Hectic Session Period

A Dangerous Senate

Albany, April 11.—Any citizen of New York who followed the course of the Legislature adjourned yesterday could not help but be thankful for a sane and sober Assembly, led by that calm veteran, Speaker Joseph A. McGinnies, which curbed a Senate whose members sponsored more threatening legislation than has ever been offered in a single session at Albany. Perhaps it was the sudden accession to power which went to the heads of the Democrats when they found themselves in control of that body. Perhaps they were thrown off their balance by the depression and a desperate desire to do something about it. Whatever the cause, they clearly demonstrated that it will be a sorry day for the Empire State if both branches of the Legislature ever fall into such hands.

Six Weeks of Session Wasted

The Senate got off to a bad start by wasting the first six weeks of the session in fighting over the jobs which fell to the Democrats by reason of their coming into control of that body. This delayed all legislation and helped make a confusing jam at the finish. In this connection it might be noted that though the Senate has but 51 members, it has at present employees and attaches drawing $60,000 more per year than the Assembly with 150 members. Temporary President Dunnigan has promised to reduce the number by 30 and the payroll by $21,000 by next year.

"Strike" Bills and "Blind" Bills

All records were broken with the introduction of 4,412 bills in the two houses. And veterans at the Capitol say that all records were also broken for the introduction of "strike" bills and "blind" bills in the Senate. A "strike" bill is one which has for its only purpose to throw such a scare into some individual, corporation or group of corporations that they will do what the introducer or his friends desire provided he will not press the bill. It may be money that is wanted, or it may be something else. At the recent session it was currently reported that the purpose of one bill introduced was to compel a large corporation to cancel a debt which was justly owing it. "Blind" bills are those which are innocent enough on the surface, but have hidden in them somewhere a vicious provision which can be turned to profit of those interested in its passage. The members interested in fair and honest legislation are constantly on the lookout for the trick measures, but with bills pouring in by the hundreds it is practically impossible to get them all. That is one of the arguments for sending honorable men to Albany rather than tricksters, no matter how clever the latter may be. In fact, the more clever, the more dangerous.

Faced Many Vexing Problems

The determination of a large part of the Senate to work constantly for personal and political advantage was all the more to be regretted this year because of the many vital problems before the legislature. In point of attention it received in and out of the Capitol, though hardly in importance, the beer question led the list. After a deadlock of more than a week between the Governor and the Assembly, a compromise was finally reached Saturday whereby the Governor yielded on his stand to have absolute control over licenses in the hands of a State board and permitted the power to grant licenses to be in the hands of a local board in each county, composed of two members, of different political parties, one chosen by the chairman of the board of supervisors, the other by a State Control Board. The action of the county board is reviewable by the State board, but the latter's action in turn is reviewable by the Supreme Court.

Avoids Political Control

This arrangement is practically in line with the recommendations the Governor's own Liquor Commission and grants the two principal points for which the Republican members of the Legislature contended—placing the primary power of licensing with local boards and assuring that the control of liquor machinery of the State cannot be put into the hands of any political party. It will be a month before the licensing machinery can be put in operation and in the meantime beer may be sold by any one who wishes, subject to local regulation.

Two Proposed Taxes Out

In its final form the tax bill enacted was essentially that proposed by Governor Lehman, but with two items eliminated by action of the Republicans in the Legislature. The Governor had proposed a continuance of the 65 per cent surtax on trucks, imposed last year. This was repealed. The governor had also proposed an additional tax of one cent a gallon on gasoline, making it four cents instead of three as at present. The Assembly first voted to put this back to two cents, but in order to balance the budget consented to let the present tax stand, declining, however, to agree to the extra cent. The Governor's proposed sales tax of three-fourths of one per cent was made an even one per cent by agreement between himself and the Democratic leaders; the one per cent tax on gross incomes was allowed; income tax exemptions were reduced to $2,500 for married persons and $1,000 for single; inheritance taxes were increased— all in accordance with the Governor' s recommendationsr Governor Lehman's recommendations. The Republicans insisted that the responsibility for these tax increases should rest with the Governor's party, since Democratic administrations had brought about the deficits which caused them, and gave them only enough votes to permit them to pass and avoid an unbalanced budget.

Trouble Follows Milk Bill Delay

One week ago Monday evening the Assembly passed the Pitcher Milk Bill and sent it to the Senate. After holding it four days it was passed by the Senate and sent to the Governor. In the meantime some of the dairymen of the State, in order to show their displeasure at the delay, resumed the strike they had inaugurated a few days before and quite a lot of the fluid was poured out along the highways. The farmers evidently felt that if the Senate stood ready to meet on Sunday in order to hasten beer legislation it was hardly fair to hold a milk bill four days before voting on it.

Says Her Husband Lost 16 Pounds In 4 Weeks

"I have never found a medicine that 'peps' you up like Kruschen Salts and better still, leaves you 'pepped up'. I take it two or three times a week—not to reduce but merely to feel good and clean. My husband took it to reduce, he lost 16 pounds in 4 weeks". Mrs. E. A. Ferris, Washington, D. C. ..(December 29, 1932).

To lose fat and at the same time gain in physical attractiveness and feel spirited and youthful take one-half teaspoonful of Kruschen in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning.

A jar that lasts 4 weeks costs but a trifle at any drugstore in the world but be sure and get Kruschen Salts the SAFE way to reduce wide hips, prominent front and double chin and again feel the joy of living—money back if dissatisfied after the first jar.

"Medicine Show" Pleased Capacity Crowd In Addison High School

A capacity audience filling the high school auditorium Friday evening to see the Medicine Show, were highly pleased by the presentation. The Medicine Show, a comedy farce, was packed with laughs from start to finish, and every one there considered they had received several times the worth of their ten cent admission price.

Curtis Oakley, as Prof. Soakem, took the part of a medicine show fakir in easy style. He was never at a loss to keep the rest of the cast moving through their lines without hitch or pause. Curtis Taylor, playing the role of Chew-Man-Chew, the professor's assistant, took his many parts with professional ease.

The Medicine Show was preceeded by a fine half hour concert given by the Addison High School Orchestra. The program of the show was much spiced by a number of musical selectins from the orchestra and mixed chorus. Too much praise cannot be given F. Arden Burt, director of music in the school, who wrote the comedy and presented it through the Addison students.

There were 799 tickets sold for the Medicine Show, pupils of the third grade leading the sale with 125. A total of $75.70 was cleared. The proceeds will go to defray the expense of the Steuben County Music Festival which will be held here in May.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR

By JOHN JOSEPH GAINES, M.D.

NOSE-BLEED

A very ancient complaint, and, an annoying one, as you well know, who are subject to attacks when least expected. Folks with full vessels are liable to it; those with "catarrh," the old bogey-man of the quack. Those with high blood-pressure? Well, if you have it, the nose-bleed is likely to prove helpful at least for awhile. Let it bleed if you have increased blood-pressure—it will lower tension.

Most people do the very wrong thing for an attack of nose-bleed; they rush to a basin of warm water, and try to get as much of it in the nose as possible. I've seen men try to drive their forefingers into the nostril as far as possible, for what purpose they could not tell. They snort, blow the nose violently, rasp the throat, and do everything to keep up the local uproar. Everything but the right thing,—which is to try to quiet the nerves, cease snorting, poking fingers and washing out with warm water. . . . Just be still, if you can. Let it drain, at least till the doctor comes, if you were so scared that you sent for him post-haste.

Every individual has his own time of blood-coagulation. This is important to him—that is, the number of minutes it takes his blood to form a clot, which arrests the nose-bleed. A clot cannot ever form, under warm water douches, and fore-finger pokings, and snortings. Sit still—be still—apply cold if anything—snort not at all. Gentle pressure at sides of nose may slow down blood flow. Firm pressure up-and-down and maintained—each side of nose. No time wasted, no harm done if it does not help. But be quiet—deliberate; I never saw a death from nose-bleed.

The time to cure nose-bleed is to get next your good doctor WHEN THE NOSE ISN'T BLEEDING. Tell the doctor I said so.

First Lady Rides

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt found time to get away from a most strenuous social and business program the third week in Washington to enjoy a horseback ride in Rock Creek Park.

HOME-MADE RELIEF UPHOLDS STANDARDS

Many farm people who believe that the Lord helps those who help themselves are practicing home-made farm relief, Mrs. Martha H. Eddy told county farm and home demonstration agents attending their annual agents' conference at the state college of agriculture and home economics last week. She added that these same people are also hoping that the legislature will help them, too.

"Home-made farm relief," Mrs. Eddy reported, "is a descriptive phrase for a living grown at home, and is an insurance of adequate living standards for an uncertain future. It is also a money-making plan in that it saves all available money for purposes like taxes and interest and for buying articles for which money is the only acceptable medium of exchange."

Although the idea of home-made farm relief is not new, the way of practicing it is, according to Mrs. Eddy. The difference between the living made by men and women for generations from the resources of their land, energy, and skill, and the present home-made farm relief is that this plan reduces the cash expenditure of living without lowering the standards of living.

The state extension service of agriculture and home economics helps families practice home-made farm relief. It gives information on ways to make a living from resources already available, Mrs. Eddy said. As chairman of the committee on home-made farm relief of the college of home economics, she reported that through lectures, discourses, demonstrations, bulletins, and articles contributed by the press, as well as through personal interviews and letters, the college specialists, home demonstration agents, and home bureau leaders are giving scientifically proved facts on food selection, preparation, and preservation, on renovating and remodeling clothing and household furnishings, on using time, energy and money to the best advantage by proper planning, and on wise buying and spending of money.

AWAKENED WOMAN

by ELINORE BARRY

Sixth Installment

SYNOPSIS

One bleak November day Joyce Ashton, poor stenographer, was in a skidding taxicab in Chicago. Next thing she remembered was two years later when she woke one morning to find herself in a luxurious house in California, with a wedding ring on her hand, and a pleasant young man, addressing her as Frills, telling her to be careful after her fall from her horse of the day before. Her husband was Neil Packard, rich fruit packer. Confused and troubled, she tried to find out more about herself and from letters in her desk found that she had been a heartless, frivolous young woman and had become involved in a serious affair with a man named Maitland. Later, when he came to see her, he was hurt and surprised when she tried to repulse him, but he finally left her.

Before the stranger reached her, she had time to see that he was a thin, unimpressive type with reddish face and tiny sandy mustache, neatly clipped. His features were small and his blue eyes twinkled. His plain gray business suit, which lacked all trace of style, was in need of pressing and his wide commonsense shoes were dusty and scratched.

"Well, Frills, how's the beautiful bean feeling today? Golly, you women are lucky, the way you can get thrown around and not get hurt! Now a man, who has to use his head, would have been just the fellow to get a crack that would put him out of business completely."

Joyce smiled up at him easily. This man was not in love with her, she knew instinctively. He was friendly enough, but impersonal.

"Oh, is that so?" she retorted. "Well, the Lord must have thought women's brains more important than men's, if he protected them so much better."

"Ha! Well, I haven't time for any arguments on the equality of the sexes now, just dropped in to see what you looked like so I can send Neil a wire that everything is O. K."

Of course! This was the doctor!

"Well, I'm all right," she replied, and then it occurred to her that she had better not be too well if she wished to stave off the hordes of friends who were trying to draw her back into their activities. "But it shook me up and I'm going to cut out some of the jazz for this week anyhow. . . . You might tell people it's by your orders."

"Ha! You don't expect anybody would believe that you were obeying any orders of mine, do you? When have you ever taken my advice, young lady?"

He stared at her with such a sudden keen searching look in his blue eyes that Joyce blushed deeper than ever.

"Advice comes natural to a doctor, Frills," he went on. "If you are going to take advice, I wish you'd take some I've given you long ago. Quit this excessive smoking! Look at the way you fidget."

"But I haven't smoked since day before yesterday," retorted Joyce triumphantly, "so it can't be that."

"It can't? Whew! No wonder you're nervous! Don't you know you can't cut it out all at once? Not a girl with your highly strung nervous system, who's been smoking at the terrific rate you have! Use a little commonsense. Here, take this. If you want to cut out smoking, do it gradually." He handed her a cigarette with a decisive gesture which made refusal impossible.

Joyce took it, her hand shaking. But before she had even raised it to her mouth, they were interrupted by the arrival of Roxie. "Dr. Ellison, the Gates Hospital wants to speak to you, sir."

The doctor jumped to his feet. "Thanks, Roxie, just tell them I'll be right there. Good-bye, Frills, I'll drop in again later," and he was off without a backward glance.

Joyce drew a breath of relief. "Another one killed off! That message was sheer luck. I couldn't light this cigarette with him looking on," she murmured.

She successfully lighted the cigarette and puffed at it daintily. After a few moments, however, her attention was suddenly distracted by the approach of a woman. In her renewed agitation, Joyce swallowed a mouthful of smoke, which to her surprise she found herself expelling through her nostrils and mouth without any sensation of strangeness. Automatically her breathing apparatus was performing a familiar operation!

Fortified to meet another visitor, she rose to her feet and smiled greeting at the newcomer.

"Well, my dear Frills, what a fortunate child you are!"

Her caller, who seated herself without waiting for an invitation, was a woman about forty years old with a delicate skin still fine in texture. She had large pale blue eyes, a straight little nose, and a thin-lipped mouth whose corners dropped with a petulant, complaining expression. Her feet were shod in beautifully fitting white kid walking slippers. From the top of her head to her feet, Mrs. Paul Packard was immaculately well dressed and well groomed.

"If she affected Frills one-half as unpleasantly as she does me," thought Joyce, "she wouldn't be on speaking terms with me now, or else at least Frills would have put the fear of God into her."

"You escaped a very serious injury," went on the visitor. "Have you had Dr. Ellison make a thorough examination?"

"No, I haven't," replied Joyce. Her welcoming smile faded out, and sitting down again, she puffed at her cigarette, waiting in defensive silence. If this was Laurine, deliver her from any more in-laws!

"Well, I should certainly think he would have done it. . . . I do wish you would consult him. I feel certain he would think a thorough internal examination the only safe thing to do after such an accident as yours. . . . A stitch in time saves nine."

Joyce wanted to add, "And an apple a day keeps the doctor away," but she kept quiet, wondering how much longer Laurine would stick to this particular subject.

Laurine changed the subject. "Delphine sent her love to you and hopes you're feeling quite recovered from the accident, and Paul said to tell you he'd probably run in sometime today. He's having lunch at the club with Otis Clark and a business friend from the city, and they're going to play golf all afternoon, with Art Belmain to make up a foursome."

It was nearly an hour later when Mrs. Paul Packard rose from the marble bench. She had touched on a multitude of subjects, ranging from the newest cold cream and its wonderful effects, to the details of the recent confinement of a Mrs. Wellman.

The effect of this call on Joyce was a wearily annoyed feeling that she had suffered more than the net results in the way of enlightening facts were worth.

"By the way, Delphine told me that she saw Arthur Maitland one night having dinner at the Palace with what she called a 'jazz baby' in a vermilion evening dress. And I heard from somebody else, though I won't repeat the name because if there's one thing I pride myself on, it's not spreading scandal or gossip — but it's a woman who spends a lot of her time in the city, and you know her almost as well as I do—that Maitland has two separate apartments in the city, not just the one where the men have their stag parties. I think you ought to know those things because you're so careless about appearances and it's a crying shame the way you run around with a man like Arthur Maitland."

In the midst of the resentful fury that seized Joyce at the nerve of the woman for mixing into her private affairs she could not help feeling admiration for Laurine's courage. She had thought of Frills as a dynamic being who would not for a moment have tolerated the rebuke or advice of such a complacent upholder of middle-aged conventionalities. She herself was speechless, wholly unprepared, and no match for Laurine's methods of attack. It occurred to her, however, that this information of the second apartment might be used later in her handling of Maitland, and she could not help being a little grateful to Laurine for furnishing her with any weapon.

Laurine, not waiting for the scarlet-faced Joyce to reply, went on calmly, "When you're a little older, my dear, and have had as much experience as I have of the world, you'll realize it's foolish to put any trust in a man who is so lacking in principle that he can deliberately compromise a married woman. Nine times out of ten, he won't be faithful to her, and when she's been made a fool of she'll find that she was only one of a number of other silly women. Arthur Maitland is no different from the rest. Well, I must run along now. And do come over soon, my dear. Paul and I are always glad to welcome you, and no matter what happens, you must feel you have a refuge in our simple home. . . ."

Joyce was left alone again, plunged into another whirl of emotions. "I'm getting so many new things to think about, so many angles all at once to this business of being Frills Packard. that it makes me dizzy trying to fit them together. Whew, but Mrs. Paul Packard is a fearful and wonderful female! I'll bet all I have that she's telling every one she knows about Arthur Maitland's other apartment. If it weren't that it helped me find out more about life here, I should have been bored to death by Laurine. . . ."

She picked up the letters again and re-read the ones from "Sophie" with a growing longing to see the baby. Fired by this feeling, she went into the house to hunt for Sophie's address. But there was no Sophie in the little pigskin book.

Maitland has two separate apartments in the city, not just the one where the men have their stag parties.

She had wandered out onto the sunny sleeping porch still pondering Laurine's conversation, when she heard the rattle of a machine which sounded like a Ford driving into the grounds. She ran downstairs, out across the terrace and around to the garage. Yes, there was Sam just getting down from the machine, and in his arms was a little black and white dog. "Here you are, Mrs. Packard, the Marches were glad to get a home for Dickie," and he set the wriggling bunch down on the ground, and laughed as it strained at its leash.

"Oh, thank you, Sam, he's a darling!" exclaimed Joyce, stooping to pat the chunky little square head.

Dickie wriggled as Sam released him from the leash and responded amiably to her patting but after a moment he looked about excitedly, dashing away from her a few feet and barking sharply, then returning again. "What does he want, do you suppose, Sam?" asked Joyce, mystified by this behavior.

"He's looking for a stick," explained Sam, "That's what you want, isn't it, Dickie?"

Sam picked up a smooth round piece of wood, showed it to Dickie who jumped frantically for it, and then threw it as far as he could. Dickie dashed after it tumultuously. Then he came romping back to Sam, who commanded, "Go take it to Mrs. Packard, Dickie, that's your lady now. Go on, give it to Mrs. Packard."

Dickie, his wide pink-lipped mouth clamped tightly over his precious stick, rolled his expressive brown eyes up at Sam in a speculative sort of way. Then he turned and trotted over to Joyce.

"There, that's enough stick for a while. You're all out of breath. Come with me, darling, and get acquainted with your new home," said Joyce finally, "thank you, Sam, I'm ever so grateful to you for getting me such a perfectly sweet dog as Dickie."

There was a look of puzzled surprise in Sam's face as he answered, "Oh, that's all right. I'm sure glad you like him, Mrs. Packard."

When Joyce sat down in a comfortable lounge chair on the terrace, Dickie came to her side and, resting his blunt chin with his queer, soft drooping lips on the edge of it, looked up at her pleadingly. She was delighted that he accepted her so promptly, and her spirits rose when she thought of having his companionship. She felt less alone in an incredible world. With Dickie she need never pretend to be Frills Packard.

When Roxie came to find her and announce that her luncheon was ready, Joyce was amused to see the distrust with which she eyed the sleeping Dickie. She did not look surprised, and Joyce knew she had probably, with Marcia, been watching the game of stick out in the garden.

Just as Joyce left the dining-room she heard the whir of a motor outside the door, and before she could decide whether to retreat through the kitchen or make a dash for the stairs, two young women entered the house and greeted her loudly.

"Hello, Frills, how are you?" "Say you don't look so bad!"

How What and Why?

This paper has arranged with the Office of Information of the New York State colleges of agriculture and home economics to answer questions about problems of farm and home. If you enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope, and mention the name of this paper, you will receive a direct reply to your query from the colleges. Do not ask more than one question in one letter or on one post card. Ask as many questions as you like, but make each one a separate communication.

Potato Seed Treatment

Mr. H. S. H. asks: "Is the seed potato treatment offered by the farm bureau as satisfactory and as cheap as any other? What treatments can be given at home and will they control scab?"

Professor M. F. Barrus encloses three instruction sheets about seed treatments which are available from the college or from the local county agricultural agent He says, "The treatment offered by the farm bureau potato seed treatment service is as satisfactory and as cheap as any. If this is available to you I would suggest that you use it.

"If you wish to treat your seed at home you may use either the cold corrosive sublimate method or the more popular yellow oxide of mercury treatment. I am enclosing directions for making these.

"In those sections of the state where scab is troublesome mercury treatments may not be satisfactory inasmuch as they tend to increase the amount of scab on the crop. I am enclosing directions for making the formaldehyde treatment. In such places the formaledhyde treatment may be better although neither formaldehyde nor any other treatment can be depended upon to control scab. The most satisfactory control of scab is to plant potatoes in soil that is acid in reaction, or which is too sour to grow a satisfactory crop of clover. Consult your county agent about soil tests."

"Maggots" in the Meal

Mrs. H. B. T. asks: "The flour, meal and cereals in my cupboards are infested with a tiny maggot. How can I get rid of them?"

Dr. Glen Herrick says that these pests are not described in the Cornell bulletin on insects but they are either the Indian meal moth or the European flour moth. He says that these insects are prevalent and highly injurious in Europe, but as yet are relatively unimportant here except in such places which have large numbers of persons and products recently from Europe, such as New York City. He says further that it makes little difference as far as results are concerned whether your pests are the meal moth or the flour moth; the results and the cures are the same with both.

He says the only way to get rid of the insects is to get rid of every bit of cereal, flour, meal or any other dry grain product which you may have around the premises. If it is infested with the larvae, destroy it; if it's not infested, use it, but get rid of it just the same. Then when everything is cleared out, do not add any more cereal products until after the cocoons are all destroyed. Since some of these cocoons are bound to be missed, the moths will hatch from them and will start a new infestation by laying their eggs on or in any cereal which may be anywhere on the shelves or in the room; hence no new supply of cereal should be brought in until after the cocoons have had a chance to develop their moths and the moths have had a chance to die, without a chance to lay eggs.

He says that it's practically impossible to get enough concentration of paradichlorobenzene or other recognized moth deterrents in any ordinary kitchen cabinet to achieve real results. The only hopeful campaign is one which entirely removes all sources of food for the larvae, even to little flecks of flour which may catch in the crannies of the cabinet.

Scale on Ferns

Mrs. S. S. Z. asks: "I am enclosing a leaf of my house fern which is infested with a scale. It starts with a watery, sticky substance which later becomes hard and scaly. What can I do about it?"

The department of entomology says, "Your fern is infested with the hemispherical fern scale. It is a difficult insect to control and about the best way to control it is to spray the fern thoroughly with nicotine sulphate. 1 teaspoonful to a gallon of water with a tablespoon or two of soap dust added. Perhaps you can take the fern out of doors on a warm day and spray it thoroughly with this solution of tobacco. You will have to give it more than one treatment with about two weeks between treatments.

Another method of treatment is to take a sponge and wipe off the scale with strong soap suds."

Coffee Grounds

S. J. P. asks: "I have heard that coffee grounds are good for the garden and for house plants. Do they have any value as fertilizers?"

Professor J. A. Bizzell says, "Dried coffee grounds contain about two percent of nitrogen; the amounts of potash and phosphoric acid in the ash are negligible. It is probable that the nitrogen in the grounds is not readilly available, so it is doubtful if the grounds have any value in the garden or for potted plants.

Blasted Dahlia Blooms

B. H. asks: "My dahlias have not blossomed for two years. Can you suggest the reason? When should dahlias and gladiolus bloom?

Professor E. A. White says: "It is difficult to say why your dahlas do not bloom. They are probably attacked by the tarnished plant bug, which is troublesome on dahlias. The insect stings the buds when they are small and the buds drop off without developing. No remedy can be suggested for the insects.

"We are sending you the free bulletin E-231 about gladiolus which answers your question about planting dates and which gives other information about growing gladiolas. Dahlias should not be planted until the ground is quite warm; this is usually about the latter part of May."

Emergency Pasture

H. A. H. asks: "I expect to be short of pasture this season. What can you suggest for emergency pasture?"

Professor John H. Barron says, "Small grain may be sown early or at intervals to meet your needs. The usual combinations are two or three bushels to the acre of barley and oats, mixed in equal proportions, or the same rate of seeding with barley, and spring wheat, mixed in equal amounts. The seeding should be thick and should be pastured heavily as soon as the growth is well started.

"Sorghum, sudan grass, and millet offer good possibilities for late summer pasture. These may be planted in warm weather and are ready for pastureing in about six weeks. Some suggested mixtures are: one and three-fourths bushels of oats and twenty pounds of Early Amber sorghum, or the same amount of oats and twenty pounds of sudan grass. Omit the oats in late plantings and sow twenty to forty pounds of sorghum or sudan grass to the acre broadcast.

"Of the millets, the Japanese is best if it can be planted before July 1. The other varieties are satisfatory if the planting is made later in the season. All of the millets are sown at the rate of one-half to three-fourths of a bushel to the acre. Sweet clover may be added to the emergency seedings if the soil is alkaline."

THE SCHOOL CHILD'S LUNCH

Fruit

Fruit is always appetizing in a school lunch and carries well. Juicy fruits are especially good with sandwiches which are likely to be dry, says the Consumers Information Service of the New York State Department of Agriculture and Markets.

Raw fruits carry well, and cooked or canned fruit can be carried easily in a small jar with a tight fitting cover.

Among the fruits most suitable for school lunches are apples, pears, peaches and grapes. Tomatoes and tomato juice should often accompany the school lunch. Some kind of fruit, either fresh or stewed, should be included in the child's lunch every day.

THE LAZY TROUT

Great white clouds in many shapes and sizes were drifting beyond the hill above the village. The warm spring rains had awakened the grass from its winter sleep and the council ground wore a fresh blanket of yellow-green.

In the cleared land beyond the village, the farmers were placing small sticks in the hollows where the water stood, for they must be drained and filled with earth before the three sisters,—corn, beans, and squash could be planted.

In the bark cabins, the women and the boys were busy placing the corn kernels in wet moss between two pieces of bark, for it was useless to plant the seed if it was not first tested to see if it would grow.

Down by the winding stream, the waters leaped over the stones; in the pool the lazy old trout swam low and slow.

Grandmother and the girls had wandered far down the woodland trail to see the skunk cabbage rise above the low land, and on the nearby hillside they had picked trilliums and bloodroots.

Coming to the water's edge to rest, one of the girls asked grandmother why the trout did not come to the top so that they could see the rainbow on its side. Wise old grandmother plucked a willow bud and taking off its winter coat, she threw the greenish yellow bud on the water. In a flash, the trout rose to the surface and the children saw its rainbow.

One of the girls asked grandmother why he did not come up before.

To this she replied, "You do not climb the apple tree unless you see the ripe apples in the branches."

For Spring there is no material more attractive than brightly printed crepes, so to those planning new frocks we suggest the choice of a slendering frock like the above, which has smart lines but is very simple and inexpensively made.

Buttons and pointed details on on the blouse are repeated on the modish sleeves, while a softly draped collar in white or some other contrasting color is a smart fashion note.

Size 16 of this simple and attractive Kay Boyd model requires 2½ yards of 54-inch material. Collar and tie requires 1-3 yard, 35 inches wide.

For the smart matron, one of the new printed fabrics is a wise selection for a Spring dress, useful for many daytime occasions.

WHEN IS ALCOHOL NOT ALCOHOL

It is a well known fact that alcohol intoxicates if taken internally.

Any drink containing alcohol, to be taken as a beverage, is therefore an intoxicating beverage.

The 18th amendment does not legalize the sale of such drinks. Congress and the President have said that after April 6th the alcoholic beverage called beer may be sold.

Therefore, any driver of a car, after April 6th next, and before the Supreme Court renders a decision as to the legality of beer sales, who meets with an accident because of a muddled brain from beer guzzling, would seem to have a perfect defense, because Congress and the President have said that beer is not intoxicating.

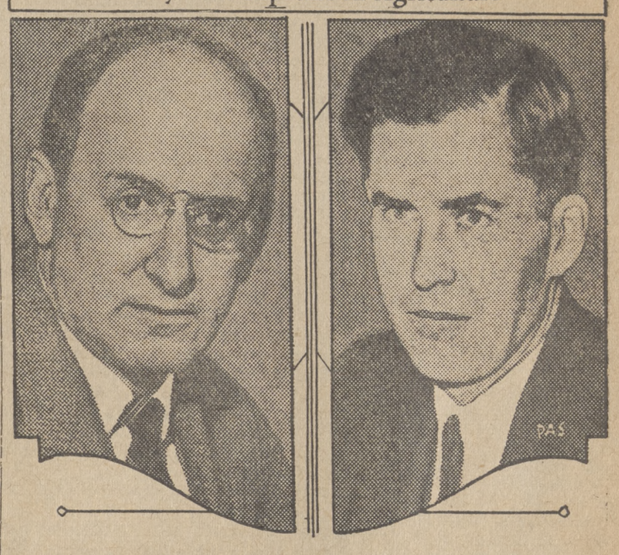
—W. E. Barron

Sal soda solution helps take off the high gloss of enamel, roughening it so that new paint can get a real grip on the old. Roughening with steel wool is another way of preparing furniture for a new cover of paint.

In the model shown the softly draped collar and the graceful lines of the skirt are flattering features.

The new Eleanor blue crepe, with collar and vest of contrasting shade, would be a fashionable selection for carrying out this easily made frock.

They Rule Supreme In Agriculture



Henry Morgenthau, Jr., (left) and Secretary of Agriculture, Henry A. Wallace, (right) are the two men who will rule supreme in federal activities to give relief to agriculture, as provided in President Roosevelt's farm measure. All farm and agriculture bureaus have been consolidated under the direction of one board with Mr Morgenthau at its head, who will work directly with Secretary Wallace.

For preserving eggs in water glass, an earthen crock is the most satisfactory kind of container since the strong alkali in the water glass affects earthenware less than it does metals.

4-H CLUB NEWS

Books for 4-H Club Members

Club members become so engrossed in their baby beef, pig, canning, clothing and other projects they may appear little interested in side lines like cultural subjects and sports, but the rule holds with them as with other youth that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy". So it is that a place is made in the 4-H program for these "side lines", and their cultivation encouraged. This is strictly in keeping with the 4-H pledge which calls for the development of the head, heart, hands and health.

The reading of good books, always regarded as one of the best ways to inspire those higher virtues of unselfishness, loyalty, steadfastness and patriotism, is given encouragement in 4-H club circles. What promises to be one of the most cultural movements in this line for the benefit of American rural youth has been undertaken by the National Committee on Boys and Girls Club Work of Chicago. Its purpose is to place standard books for juvenile reading within reach of every club boy and girl. These books are new, well printed and bound in fabrikoid to make them both durable and beautiful. The plan is possible only through the cooperation of the National Home Library Foundation, of Washington, D. C.

The first 12 books sponsored by the foundation, and now ready for national distribution, are known as the Jacket Library, a: d include such delightful and time tested works as Treasure Island, Adventures of Tom Sawyer, Alice in Wonderland, as well as more serious books. State club leaders have been provided with sets of the Jacket Library for inspection by county and local club leaders. The set is available by members or clubs under the same terms.

Chevrolet Dealers Report Sales Increases for March

Detroit, Mich., April 10,—Evidence of a sharp resumption of retail buying was contained in the report of Chevrolet dealers, made public here today, that March retail sales to consumers exceeded last March and that the last ten days of the month were 5,000 new cars and trucks better than the corresponding ten days last year.

H. J. Klingler, vice-president and general sales manager, in releasing the figures stated that despite the banking paralysis which crippled sales in many sections for the first twenty days, six of the company's eight regions scored gains over last March. Even in the region centering at Flint, Michigan, a state without normal banking facilities during the entire month, a gain of 200 cars over last March was recorded. Every single region, Mr. Klingler said, reported selling more cars in the last ten days than in the two previous ten-day periods combined.

Total deliveries to consumers in March were 34,716 new cars and trucks compared with 33,125 in March, 1932. For the first quarter of this year retail sales to consumers totaled 106,691 new units compared with 100, 273 in the first quarter in 1932, Mr. Klingler announced.

Field stocks of new cars dropped 2,000 units during the month, and as of the close of March, 42,700 new cars and trucks were divided amoung the company's 10,000 dealers. Used car stocks remained unchanged, indicating an excellent used as well as new car market inasmuch as at this season used stocks normally increase, Mr. Klingler pointed out.

He stated that every month this year Chevrolet dealers sold more cars at retail than in the corresponding months of 1932.

People Protest Irregular Dating of Gas Bills

Addison people are complaining of the irregular issuance of their gas bills. Many persons claim they are losing their cash discounts on gas bills because the date for payment varies from month to month.

Under the ownership of Frank Kelly, the Addison Gas Company bills were discountable on the 18th of each month following issuance of the bills on the first. When the Addison Gas Company was taken over by the Allegany Gas Company the bills for August gas were discountable September 19. The time of reading was then moved ahead and the next bills issued had to be paid by October 11 to earn the discount. Since that time the payment date has varied from month to month, all the way from the 6th to the 10th day.

This fluctuating payment date has caused a great deal of confusion among local people. For years they were in the habit of paying their electric bills on or about the 10th of each month and their gas bills the 18th, or just prior to that date. Their complaint has not been occasioned by pushing the time of discount of the bills earlier in the month, but because the Addison Gas and Power Company now has no fixed discount date. When customers know a current bill will be due on a certain day each month, they fix that date in mind and try to take advantage of the discount.

It is to be hoped the Addison Gas and Power Company will take notice of the complaints being made about the irregularity of monthly bills, and fix some certain date so that local people will not suffer so much loss of discounts.

It has been stated as a matter of statistics that money carried in a bank account is ninety-nine times safer than money carried about the person, in the home or office, or secreted in some silly way.

THIS fact is commended to the attention of timid individuals who should remember that back of money carried in an account here are the entire resources of this bank, and the protection afforded by banking laws and bank examiners.
